REMARKS.—Three short intervals of cold, between the 8th and 18th of the month, reduced the average of the first fourteen days to 26° 19; but the remaining seventeen days were of so mild a character that their mean temperature rose to 34° 84; giving us generally a slight frost in the night & a pleasant soft air through the day. In reviewing the month, we find only five days in which the mercury fell below 20°; and that the winds prevailed from the northern semi-circle in the proportion of more than two to one, but were mostly moderate or light, without an incident of violence from that or any other quarter in the course of the thirty-one days; and moreover, that in the five cases when the mercury fell below 20, the cold was simultaneous with or preceded by a brisk northerly wind.—Now we will venture to record it as an axiom in Meteorology, applicable to the Atlantic border from the latitude of 42 or 43, that intense cold is produced there in our Winter months, by the quickness and duration of the northerly winds, and that velocity of current is requisite for the production of a low degree in the mercury.—Although the cold may continue for a day or two after the winds have subsided, because we are then surrounded by a mass of sharp air from the regions of the north, yet that cold is nevertheless the effect of the speed of its passage.—No one can site an instance of severe cold produced here by light northerly winds.—Let those who doubt examine our Diaries, and we hold them as converts.

POETRY.

FROM THE EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

"I came to the place of my birth and cried, 'The friends of my youth, where are they?' and echo answered, 'where are they?'"

LONG years had elaps'd since I gaz'd on the scene
Which my fancy still rov'd in the freshness of green,
The spot where a school-boy, all thoughtless, I stray'd
By the bank of the stream in the gloom of the shade.

I thought of the friends who had roam'd with me there,
When the sky was so blue, and the flowers so fair;
All scatter'd—all sunder'd, by mountain and wave,
And some in the cold silent regions of the grave!

I thought of the green banks that circled around,
With wild flowers, with sweet briar, and eglantine crown'd;
I thought of the river, all sunless and bright
As the face of the sky on a mild autumn night.

And I thought of the trees under which we had stray'd;
Of the broad leafy boughs with their coolness of shade;
And I hop'd though disdain'd, mine to take in to find,
Of the names and the carvings, impress'd on the rind.

All fondly I turned to behold,
Wonder'd seared and dear by the feelings of old,
And I deem'd that unalter'd, my eye should explore
This refuge, this haunt, this elysium of yore!

'Twas a dream—not a token of trace could I view
Of the names that I lov'd, of the trees that I knew;
Like the shadows of night at the dawning of day—
Like a tale that is told, they had vanish'd away!

And I thought the lone river that murmur'd along,
Was more dull in its music, more sad in its song,
Since the birds that had nested and warbled above,
Had all fled from its banks at the fall of the grove!

I paused—and the moral came home to my heart;
Behold now of earth all the glories depart!
Our visions are baseless; our hope but a gleam;
Our staff but a reed; our life but a dream.

Enough! let us look—let our prospects allure
To scenes that can fade not, to realms that endure;
To glories, to blessings that triumph sublime,
O'er the blightings of change, and the ruins of time!

FROM THE EDINBURGH SCOTSMAN.

FARE thee well, for I must leave thee,
Dearest girl! let not our parting grieve thee,
Happier days may yet be mine,
At least I wish them thine—believe me.

We part—but by those dew-drops clear
My love for thee will last forever;
I leave thee—but thy image dear,
Thy tender smiles, will leave me never.

O! dry those pearly tears that flow;
One farewell smile before we sever,
The only balm for parting woe,
Is—lovely hope 'tis not forever.

Tho' dark and dreary low'rs the night,
Calm and serene may be the morrow;
The cup of pleasure ne'er shone bright
Without some mingling drop of sorrow

MISCELLANY.

FROM THE (PHIL.) NATIONAL GAZETTE.

Instructions for Young Justices of the Peace.

The office of Justice of the Peace, being, like all others, bestowed, generally with a view to the profit and convenience of the incumbent, without any regard to his qualifications for the place, or the advantage of the public service it will be furthering the benign intentions of those appointments to give such instructions to the new hands, (the old ones do not want them) as will enable them to make the most of their places. Generally speaking, these executive gifts cannot be called gratuitous or even lumdary; but are made on a full and valuable consideration for labour and services performed or expected, and it is therefore the more just and reasonable, that the donee should treat his commission as his property, and obtain from it every cent that ingenuity and good management can produce.—A few cardinal rules, well observed, will answer the purpose.

1. Always bear in mind that the plaintiff is the party who brings the suit—remember that the plaintiff, is the man who gives you the job, and you must thenceforth consider him as your friend and client—be kind and choice, among a score of you, for his business, and his coming to you is a marked and flattering preference which calls for a grateful return.—This is an important matter; your success depends much on a strict attention to it—It follows, you must always give judgment for the plaintiff; and you may do this with an easy conscience, because—if the defendant dont like it, he may appeal, and thereby you will increase your bill of costs.—you may depart from this rule in one case only, that is, when the plaintiff happens to be some poor devil, whom chance has thrown into your office; and his adversary a man of consideration, whose patronage may be valuable to you.

2. Get the confidence and good will of two or three leading constables. Hold hands with the rest, who are a sort of jackalls to bring prey to the royal paws—You must consider these gentlemen as your best friends and safest advisers; and take care that you never disregard their counsel, nor thwart their designs. They are full of resources and contrivances for the common benefit—they perceive profit or danger where you would never suspect it—A timely wink from a constable has saved many a justice from a blunder that would have injured them both. You must resolutely turn a deaf ear to all complaints against them, especially on the subject of extortion—Let them grind the poor and oppress the rich; it is their occupation and very life. To prevent it would be to ruin them and yourself; to dry up the very sources of your revenue, and starve you both.

"Is it not so if this mouth, should tear this hand
For lifting food to't?"

There is little, or indeed no danger in standing firmly by your constables, even in the most extreme case—the wretches who suffer under them are too ignorant to know when they are oppressed; or too poor and friendless to obtain redress. Remember you have a common cause and object with your constables. Business and costs; the administration of justice is no affair of yours; that belongs to courts and lawyers, who are paid for it. It is enough for you to take care of yourselves and your fees, without being troubled with perplexing controversies, in which you have no interest or concern.

3. Study the fee bill carefully and deeply. This is the only Act of Assembly you need give much attention to. Consult your appendant constables, who will furnish you with much valuable information on this all important subject. Study the fee bill deeply and cunningly, by no means, however, for the purpose of conforming to it, but that you may enlarge, evade, and circumvent it. The wit of one man, directed to one object, and stimulated by interest, is an overmatch for the wisdom of an hundred who would impose checkins and constraint upon him.—Witness Baron Trenck, and many others, who, by the application of this principle, have broken the strength of dungeons, and defied the power of kings. You will be astonished, after some experience, to find with what imposing ingenuity the same service, even a single act, may be divided and subdivided into an hundred parts, and presented in as many aspects, so as to furnish a charge for each, without an obvious, direct, tangible violation of the law. If perchance you should be caught, you may justify or extenuate under the practice of all your associates, who have construed the act in the same way; and so common an error cannot be designed or corrupt. The law protects you against all errors of judgment, and who can prove this was not one?

4. Never be afraid of detection or punishment for any misdemeanor in office. The modes of proceeding against you in such cases, are so dilatory and expensive, that the sort of people you will deal with will have neither heart nor means to attempt them; and you may feel unshaken confidence in your safety from the known circumstance that fifteen hundred or more justices of the peace, in this good commonwealth are daily committing some act of oppression or injustice, by ignorance or design, and we have not one instance of punishment.

A certain judge of high station, and facetious memory, used to say, it was impossible to get hold of a justice of the peace for his misdemeanours in office; "for," said he, "if you bring one up in the plainest case, he immediately pleads his ignorance, and d—n him, who can gainsay that."

NOTICE.

A RESPECTABLE Gentleman, in one of the healthiest situations in South-Carolina, wishes to engage a middle aged WOMAN, of good character to take the care of three small children. Any one who is willing to engage in the business is requested to apply at the Office of the Newport Mercury for further information.
